Leslie MacEvoy argue that The Thin Red Line simply is an instance of 'Heideggerian cinema' (2003, 173-185). This follows firstly, they suggest, from the fascinating biographical facts of Malick's career. Malick studied philosophy as an undergraduate with Stanley Cavell, and briefly taught philosophy at the MIT.

The Thin Red Line is neither the distortion of Jones's novel nor the historical aberration that some have claimed it to be. In fact, Malick's film not only offers a complex adaptation of Jones's novel but also engages with elements of the historical record that have been largely overlooked in many previous film representations of the Pacific campaign.

The greatest fault of The Thin Red Line was its timing - it was released at around the same time as Spielberg's Saving Private Ryan. While most people dismissed The Thin Red Line as the 'other' World War II movie of 1998, it's actually a very different kind of film - the film itself is not hurt by similarity to Ryan but was hurt commercially due to the misconception.
